No Surprises Act

After an initial session, the therapist will discuss treatment options and potential treatment plans, including number of sessions, recommended to meet client therapy goals. In compliance with the No Surprises Act, ICFE therapist will provide a Good Faith Estimate (GFE) of costs to private pay clients, and the GFE will be updated in the event of a change in treatment plan or diagnosis. However, please be aware that fees per session only change (depending on therapist) based on the modality of services, not the diagnosis or treatment plan. Fees and cost for therapy are based on the time spent in therapy sessions. Clients may choose to stop therapy or transfer to a different therapist at any time. Therapy is voluntary and the client determine how many sessions they want to attend. Therapy clients should also be aware that many things outside the therapy session that impact how quickly therapy goals are met, and if the goals are met at all. The variables that impact the pace and effectiveness of psychotherapy include: clients’ follow through on ‘homework’ and changes suggested in therapy, health of the clients’ support system, the severity and length of history of the problem being addressed, stressors unrelated to problem (such as employment, financial, extended family), clients’ physical health and illness, and many other factors. Psychotherapy, and especially relational therapy focused on couple or family issues, is unlike treatment for most medical conditions where, after accurate diagnosis, a concrete and time-specific intervention can be recommended. ICFE therapists' goal is to be transparent regarding costs throughout the therapeutic process to ensure clients are fully informed and able to accurately anticipate costs for services.

*Specific information about all costs related to court involvement are detailed in each therapist's informed consent document completed with clients prior to the first session. These fees are in addition to any costs for therapeutic services and are not considered in the Good Faith Estimate provided to clients. Clients are strongly encouraged to talk with their therapist in advance of any potential legal involvement. ICFE therapists' focus is on health and healing, not participation in legal matters.
